

Practicing allowable, safe language work

Physical distancing of 6ft / 2m is not a suitable alternative in the context of most language work. That means you cannot sit with anyone you are not already self-isolating with – that is, no one outside of your immediate household.

Keep your communities, families and especially Elders safe.

Absolutely NO direct face-to-face language activities are permitted at this time.

Language activities that are safe to do & continue:

Phone & Video Chats

Meetings, focus groups, info collection, via phone, video chat or other media channels.
As long as everybody remains in their own home.

Audio / Video Recordings

Ask participants to share knowledge or document research-related activities via audio or video recordings, then send to you. As long as they interact only with others already in self-isolation with them in the same house.

Online Questionnaires

Create versions of questionnaires, assessment tools, etc. that participants can fill out electronically and return via email or use free software like fillable PDF, Google Docs, Google survey or SurveyMonkey.

Transcribe

Transcribe interviews or recordings. Independently at home.

Research

Work on archival resources or analyze existing data. Independently at home.

Develop

Make language resources to share electronically. Independently from home.

Create

Create videos/films/shorts with footage and recordings that you can receive remotely and share with others. Independently from home.

File Share

For larger file sharing, consider WeTransfer (images/audio) or YouTube/Vimeo (videos - 'private')
